Last night's election results clearly demonstrated that Canadians want change. Canadians sent a clear message that the Harper Conservative agenda does not represent our interests and needs.

The Liberals have said that they want to transform the country and Parliament. Now they are in a position to do so and we are expecting change. The new government must bring a new spirit of collaboration to Ottawa and should work with the NDP so Canadians can benefit from the best ideas, often born of cooperation.

We lament the loss of the many progressive and thoughtful NDP MPs who lost their seats in this election.

Thank you to the thousands of Unifor members across Canada who got involved in this election, through workplace canvasses, volunteering on local campaigns and bringing attention to important local issues. Thank you for your efforts.

Our work is not finished, it is only beginning – we will remain committed to changing the politics of this country so that we can all thrive.

We will ensure the Liberals are held to account for the commitments they made during the election, including: protecting our health care system, improving Employment Insurance and strengthening the Canada Pension Plan.

This is not over, this is only the beginning of the change we must see in our country.

In solidarity,

Jerry Dias - President, Unifor
